- Child labor– labor, performed by children under the age of 15 (14 in some countries), which slows their physical, emotional, mental and spiritual development.
- Today over 218 million children are being exploited.
- Underage workers often become subjects to physical and intellectual abuse.
- In most cases, the conditions, in which children perform labor, are not suitable for work and may lead to the development of illnesses and subsequent death.

Issue discussion

- Vast majority of child laborers come from low-income families.
- Employers who provide children with work, often neglect them stable wages and social care packages.
- Most of those children are bonded laborers, who assist their parents in paying off their debts.
- Bonded labor is an equivalent to slavery, since a child cannot leave the workplace willfully, or continue their studies until the debt is paid off.
